01

→ How should we define Australia's national interests in a changing world? How should our values underpin Australia's foreign policy? What should we do differently? How can we do better?

To define Australia's interest would be to stop importing immigrants in numbers that outway the number of jobs we are creating, that goes for any race or religion.

Stop selling off our assets to foreign owned business.

Make people who want to become Australian citizens sign a binding contract that commits them to work for the greater good of this nation and review their progress for 3 years If they pass the prerequisite and have not been charged with any offence, then and only then will they become an Australian.

02

→ Which countries will matter most to Australia over the next 10 years? Why and in what ways? How should we deepen and diversify key relationships? → Which global trends, such as developments in technology, environmental degradation and the role of non-state actors, are likely to affect Australia's security and prosperity? How should Australia respond?

For a start forget Indonesia, they are laughing at us we are giving them 100's of millions of dollars for aid and they are spending billions on their defense forces, why who is attacking them ? No one they are preparing to be the Bullies of the Asian Pacific.

Remove ourselves from the UN, since when have we needed them and they can't do anything anyway, they are just full of words with no action other than to money grab.

Protect our exports to China, for eg.selling off our dairy industry to them so they can produce cheap dairy products for their own people is not looking after us.

Chase up Solar technology in the form of solar panel paths that generate lights for government owned roads, streets and parks ect.You the government should lead the way, instead of taxpayers paying for out dated lighting ect.

We do not have to depend upon other countries anywhere near as much as we are if you the government can get us back to basics. We have our own base resources, lets use them ourselves, we should almost be completely self sufficient, we were, not that long ago, make it happen.

03

→ Which regional and global organisations matter most to us? How should we support and shape them? How can we maximise our influence?

Stop pretending we are some high and mighty country and look after us the people of Australia. We can get things done on the quiet, people in general love to cut down the tall poppies so stop sticking our head up. Start looking and studying countries that are prospering, you will notice they are not putting there hand up for everything.

04

→ What steps should be taken to maximise our trade and investment and expand commercial opportunities for Australian business? How can we ensure Australia is positioned to take advantage of opportunities in the global economy? What are the key risks to Australia's future prosperity and how should we respond?

Invest in Australia and australian people, it's where the investment money comes from, play real instead of on paper that is for countries that do not own anything, after all think for your self, what do we have that is the best, the fastest, the biggest, the most technologically advanced and the answer is nothing ! But what we do have is land to produce livestock, resources such as iron, aluminum, gold, gas, coal, petroleum, uranium, all the base ingredients to cook up jobs and produce stuff. We need oil refineries of our own we have miles and miles of roads, were do you think bitumen and asphalt come from and the fuel to traverse this great land.

If you can not keep a steel plant going in this country then there really is a problem ! One answer might be to scale back export of base minerals by applying more direct tax to them, after all have you seen the difference in the look of the Iron Knob in Sth Australia, it will be Iron Plains before you know it.

05

→ What assets will we need to advance our foreign policy interests in future years? How can we best use our people and our assets to advance Australia's economic, security and other interests and respond to external events?

How about opening your eyes and not following these countries with instabilities instead of thinking we will do it better lets just not go that root, ask ourselves after all were is the benefit. Are there not more economically beneficial things we can do.

And just keep people out if they come from questionable places we are under no obligation to take anyone in, unless you the government put us under one.

06

→ What assets will we need to advance our foreign policy in future years ?

The answer is, real average working Australians, involved in the making, not people who have never lived among the lower and middle class.

→ How can Government work more effectively with non-government sectors, including business, universities and NGOs, to advance Australia's interests?

How about talking to them and listening and not just to the large companies, small business as well.
